

Callan Institute Training During COVID 19 Keeping you Safe

Coronavirus
COVID-19

At Callan Institute, we are committed to providing ongoing training and support in new and innovative ways in adherence with the national public health guidelines. This is to ensure that not only are we working hard to keep each other safe, but that we continue to provide the best possible support and service to the individual's we support.

Is there a need to focus on training with everything else going on?

During these difficult times, we are all being asked to creatively adapt our services in a person centred way to create an environment where people feel safe and engaged in meaningful activities, are supported with any worries or concerns that may have, have moments of fun and enjoyment and to instill hope, that we will come through, safely together. RUA, Positive Behaviour support and the Multi-Element Behaviour Support Model is more important than ever.

What are Callan Institute doing differently now?

We have adapted our training to online formats to allow for continuation of training services. We are primarily using Zoom as our platform for this.

To date, we have had staff join us in a number of ways. Some like to join together in a socially distanced and safe way on a work site to experience the workshops as a group. Some like to join individually from a work site, or from their home. However you would like to join us, we have zoom guidelines for this to ensure your safety.

Is it like face to face training?

We're big believers that we learn best by learning from each other; and by sharing stories and experiences. Face to face training tends to lend itself to this a little better. However, we have made adaptations that have allowed us to keep this interactive style going.

- We have reduced our numbers to allow for more interaction;
- We are using breakout rooms to allow for group conversations and group work similar to how we would work in a training room;
- We take breaks regularly and leave the 'room open' so you can return early and chat to colleagues if you wish.

When will face to face training return?

As government guidance and practicalities allow, we hope to gradually reintroduce face to face training options. However, as long as there is any risk of COVID 19, online options will be available.
